Join an acclaimed law professor for a timely, nonpartisan look at what happens when US presidents are accused of abusing their power.

The current political investigations we see in our news cycle every day make a course like Investing American Presidents an essential one for anyone looking to make sense of what exactly is going on in government.

Just as important as the historical accuracy that explores such contemporary issues requires a professor who's impartial and nonpartisan.

Professor Rosenzweig's lectures are designed to provide an unbiased view of current events by exploring them through the lens of American political history and law practice.

Paul Rosenzweig is a Professorial Lecture in Law at The George Washington University Law School.
